

11, GREENWAY ROAD, BRISTOL,

September 27th, 1906.

I have the pleasure to announce the publication of my work,

GEORGE MULLER and his SUCCESSORS,

By his nephew, Edward Kennaway Groves, on this the hundred and first anniversary of his birth.

It is a handsomely-bound book of upwards of 400 pages, illustrated by 24 full-page pictures on art paper, and having the unique feature of a medallion in the centre of its cover, giving an exact portrait of the great philanthropist on his ninetieth birthday.

While fully answering to its title in the amount of information given, the copy also contains many matters of the deepest social interest. As this precludes my getting a publisher for my work, I am undertaking the sale of it myself. When advertisement is not suitable for a publication, there is all the greater need of its introduction to the reading public by the most influential MAN that is to be found.

Accordingly I applied to His Majesty's Private Secretary for permission to present the first copy of my work to the KING before putting it into the hands of any of his subjects. The Duke of Kent died in Woolbrook Glen, Sidmouth, which was, at that time, the property of General Baynes, and

I was thus able to anticipate any enquiry as to who I was, by the information that His Majesty's grandfather's latest breath was drawn in my grandfather's house.

The reply, which came to me from Buckingham Palace, was as follows :—

“The Private Secretary begs to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Edward Groves' letter of the 15th instant, and in thanking him, to say that the King will be happy to accept a copy of his book.

“24th September, 1906.”

Every application for a copy of this work must be made to myself, and accompanied by a postal order for 5s.

The parcel enclosing the book that I send will also contain a post card with my address, which is to be dropped into a post office on its receipt, to assure me of its safe arrival.

No copy of this work can be lent under any circumstances, or supplied on credit to any individual.

Having spared neither pains nor expense in giving the reader full value for his money, I am not willing to incur any risks in selling the book.

Those who would not listen to the LIFE TRUTH expounded in a treatise, will thoroughly understand the doctrine which it is our joy to proclaim, before reaching the end of the volume.

Faithfully yours,

EDWARD K. GROVES.
